The Art of Biography Writing

Stefan Zweig dedicated a significant portion of his career to writing biographies. He believed that biographies should go beyond a mere chronological account of events and delve into the psychology and motivations of their subjects.

In his biographies, Zweig masterfully drew readers into the lives of his subjects, providing them with a deep sense of empathy and understanding. Through meticulous research and engaging prose, he painted vivid pictures of historical figures such as Mary, Queen of Scots, Marie Antoinette, Leo Tolstoy, and Fyodor Dostoevsky.

What set Zweig's biographies apart was his ability to humanize his subjects. He explored their emotional complexities, struggles, and triumphs, allowing readers to see them as multifaceted individuals rather than distant historical figures.

In 1929, Franz Xaver Kappus compiled ten letters that he received from Rainer Maria Rilke that were written from 1902 to 1908 and published them under the title “Briefe an einen jungen Dichter” (Letters to a Young Poet) through Insel Verlag in Leipzig. Rilke and Kappus never met in person. When Kappus wrote his first letter to Rilke he asked for Rilke to provide a critique of his poetry. Rilke provided the young Kappus very little in criticism or in suggestions for his improvement as a poet. Instead, Rilke discouraged Kappus from reading criticism and advised him to trust his inner judgment, commenting that "Nobody can advise you and help you. Nobody. There is only one way—Go into yourself." Rilke provided advice that inspired Kappus to search broader issues of intimacy and the nature of beauty and art, as well as probing philosophical and existential questions. The letters address personal issues that Kappus had apparently revealed to Rilke; ranging from atheism, loneliness, and career choices.
