The woman he seeks, Anna Peteskow, is the one remaining of three power figures in the underworld of the world, enjoying the freedom to influence governments around the globe and eliminate those who oppose her without ever hitting a headline, if you don't count her understated obituary in an Ohio newspaper.

The ally he discovers has all the power the rest of his people lack; she is Anna's youngest daughter. If Duncan can discover Anna Peteskow alive, Jennifer Peteskow can attest to Anna's absence from her family home at critical moments of world events, and if she will do that, others can attest to where Anna really was and with whom. But can Duncan trust this young woman who may be taking over Anna's operations, could be issuing orders to her operatives as artfully and secretly as her mother once did?
